

terms of size — develop differently due to differences in the dynamics of the demographic processes. Structural changes of the Roma ethnic group are shown with regard to sex, age and place of residence during the periods between the censuses.

The structure of the Roma ethnic group is studied in terms of its relative share from the structure of the entire population and distribution of the territories inhabited by the Roma ethnic group.

The development of the Roma population is investigated, based on the main ethnic and demographic indicators: mother language and religion.
